After an exhibition at the Oceanographic Museum of Monaco, and before flying to the Royal Ontario Museum in Toronto, Philippe Pasqua is the guest of the Departmental Domain of Chamarande until December 30, 2018. With its 17th-century chateau, 18th-century orangery and vast English-style park, the Domain is the perfect setting to host the first major French retrospective of Philippe Pasqua's works: so huge, yet so human.

An unconventional artist, autodidact and virtuoso designer, Philippe Pasqua provokes an emotional dialogue with his spectators through the monumentality of his sculptural and pictorial works, which evoke a fantasy world.

The ALLEGORIA exhibition reveals all the facets of Philippe Pasqua's creative universe, gathering a mix of older works and recent productions. In the orangery are presented his majestic five-meter-long portraits of women; in the main alley, his chrome shark hangs from a ten-meter-high portico leading to the chateau. Inside the chateau, a set of drawings, sculptures, paintings and collages unfurls from the multi-faceted installation Le chant des méduses (The song of the jellyfish), a work that symbolizes this extraordinary artist's universe. In the meadow, like an echo, are the artist's bronzes of dignified, delicate olive trees with their twisted trunks.

The work of Philippe Pasqua plays in every emotional key, from one extreme to the other. Some of the works are tender, reflecting a deep empathy with their models; others channel a darker, sometimes primitive aspect, or develop an almost childish humor. None of these creations leave you indifferent, and they allow you to see through the eyes of an artist of extreme sensitivity.

We wish you a wonderful visit, to discover the fantastical and deeply human world that Philippe Pasqua has imagined for the Departmental Domain of Chamarande.

Welcome home!

The Departmental Domain of Chamarande, with its 17th-century castle, 18th-century orangery and the greenery of its park are the perfect environment to host the first major French exhibition of contemporary artist Philippe Pasqua. This exceptional setting is an enchanting showcase for the dreamlike, symbolic universe of the artist's paintings, drawings, collages and monumental sculptures.

Born in Grasse in 1965, self-taught French sculptor and painter Philippe Pasqua began painting at the age of 17 after being deeply struck by a reproduction of one of Francis Bacon's paintings. The influence of Lucian Freud's work also helped construct his vision of a world of troubled and troubling characters, their faces marked or misshapen. The fragility of the madman and the difference of disability are recurring themes that haunt his work.

As a sculptor, he has been exploring the topic of vanitas since 1987. His concern: to find the essence of humanity through what remains of it beyond life.

He works on representing the material that composes it, the cladding of flesh and bone as mortal as it is timeless: the eternity of the matrix. According to Pasqua: "The skeleton, the skull, it is precisely what I can never see or paint but what carries the flesh. "

The artist's powerful style, both in painting and sculpture, asserts itself in a fantastical and esoteric universe that transcends a child's anguish at the violence of the world, their questioning of the beauty in the ugly, their incomprehension before the irreversible destruction of nature underway.

Over the years, Pasqua has established himself as a major artist on the international cultural scene. His thought-provoking art impresses and disrupts. His works are on display all over the world, in New York, Moscow, Hong Kong, Mexico City, London and Hamburg. Since his first show in Paris in 1990, he has had international exhibitions in the United States, Russia, Taiwan, Hong Kong, London, Israel, Lebanon and Italy. Testifying to the interest he creates, his work has been featured in publications including Le Monde Magazine, the New York Times, Current Art, Vogue Brazil, Technikart specials and others.

In 2017, the Oceanographic Museum of Monaco invited Pasqua to show his monumental works, resulting in an exhibition of several major works from May to December (watch the making of the installation of the exhibition "Borderline" at the Oceanographic Museum of Monaco:

<https://vimeo.com/216517044>).

The exhibition saw Pasqua create ambitious works in collaboration with some of the world's best craftsmen.

Beaux Arts Magazine marked the occasion by dedicating a special issue to the artist, the second of his career. Following a first 50-minute documentary made by TV channel ARTE in 2011, "Pasqua the elusive", TV5 Monde is currently shooting a feature-length program about his life and monumental work in Monaco and Chamarande.

Pasqua uses his art to explore the palette of his emotions and give them a collective dimension. With his acute gaze, he pierces the tumult of history, going from ancient times to breaking news. He speaks of the depletion of the earth, species disappearing, as well as the grandeur of the universe.

His paintings tell the story of humanity. Ugliness and beauty intersect and his models become icons: disabled children, transgender people, prostitutes or his own family members. All reflect the universal. The intensity of their gazes, the strength of their expressions permeate his paintings. On a technical level, Pasqua displays the same mastery of his distinct style whether drawing or painting, in collage or sculpture.

In 1999, Pasqua took up the concept of vanitas in sculpture: he interpreted the subject of the human skull, which he adorned with precious materials and fragile butterflies. The ephemeral and the inconstancy of existence are confronted with the eternal.

In the last couple years, the evolution of the world and its species has become the subject of the artist's concerns. The theories of Darwin of contemporary scientists, connected with the notion of the sacred - almost the religious - have inspired such works as Golgotha and the Last Supper.

The ALLEGORIA exhibition shows monumental sculptures as well as a set of paintings, drawings, and collages by Pasqua, spanning his thirty-year career. ALLEGORIA is a journey through the soul of our planet, with its cycles of life, death and resurrection.

Why do we collect the works of Philippe Pasqua?

We see Philippe as the little Paul of Jean Cocteau's "Les Enfants Terribles": he sets his imagination free by liberating himself from the constraints of the real world. What individual trapped in the shackles of society would imagine a 10-meter-tall stainless steel shark more real than life? Or a dish of charred human skulls? For Philippe, life and death engage in a solemn danse macabre, made up of souls who love each other, leave each other, tear each other apart, but always remain inseparable from the soul of the world that drives them.

Krystel Ann Art

Coproducers

Krystel Ann Art is a contemporary art gallery founded in 2016 by two collectors: Olivier Tharsis and Chrystelle Merabli.

Olivier Tharsis created and managed Bik Kreyol in Guadeloupe: a unique cultural space, both restaurant and cabaret, where nights turned into events and an ambitious program brought together music, dance and theater in a single venue.

A place to gather, exchange and experiment, Bik Kreyol occupied a central role in the social and artistic life of Guadeloupe.

After ten years of success there, Tharsis continued as a discoverer of talent by promoting artists on their way to international recognition.

With a Masters in Economics, Chrystelle Merabli established herself in finance and real estate via several companies in Europe, the Caribbean and the United States.

Meanwhile her passion for art led her to invest in a rich collection of contemporary designers, painters and sculptors. Since 2017 she has been completing a course at Sotheby's Institute of Art in order to perfect her skills.

The Krystel Ann Art gallery bases its artistic selection on a demand for singularity: Olivier and Chrystelle seek out difference in approach, originality in expression and sensitivity in aesthetics. Their quest leads them to new artists who venture into unexplored fields, bearing messages, social meaning and sincere emotion.

Like Bik Kreyol, the Krystel Ann Art Gallery wants to bring art to spectacle and spectacle to art. Exhibitions become performances, encounters, a melting pot of ideas and concepts. Creators' statements are offered directly to the public instead of through an elitist barrier, simple communication replacing demands.

Krystel Ann Art's work also includes sponsoring artists: supporting the creative process to enable creators to work independently and opening doors for them is a fundamental requirement.

Krystel Ann Art founded the association Kouleurs et Sens with French and Caribbean cultural experts to promote cultural exchanges between different countries and people, with an emphasis on the need to address major public interest causes such as environmental protection and children's rights.

Since its creation, Krystel Ann Art has participated in two international fairs, taken part in several shows and organized gallery openings:
